Shinsaku Elementary School KURITA YOSHIYA

Previously, an impressive essay I found at a high school entrance examination that the writer who is a Japanese English user on the job usually feels nervous to speak English in front of Japanese English experts rather than native speaker. Why is that? Japanese English experts tend to criticize other's English such as finding grammar mistakes, sticking to pronunciation, so it causes us to pull down motivation from each other.

Sticking to pronunciation is not necessary. For instance, American pronunciation which we learned in junior high school no sound T and rolling tongue R. However, American English is not mainstream in the world rather one of dialect. Most of English user including British pronounce T with clearly and R is vowel extension similar Japanese such as I drink water(wo-ta-) in the car(ka-). African and Mediterranean English are far from American. I never say British preference but pronunciation is almost not only diversity but also has been evolving. A Japanese comedian succeeded at the audition in the UK. Despite some Japanese said his English is weird, it can be understood audience because everyone laughed. To try to speak English with confidence in our daily English class.

Learning English is effective for collect information from all over the world such as environment, conflict, progressive tech and human cultural diversity. For instance, 6grade English textbook 'NEW HORIZON' unit5 handles the sea pollution that sea turtles sometimes make mistakes to eat plastic bags as jellyfish. I had strong curiosity for plastic trash and investigated it website that written English. So, I could know the Great plastic gavage made a huge island bigger than Japan in the ocean. It's rare to read on Japanese newspaper. Learning English boosts to learn the globe with intelligent inquistiveness.
